Personality, hobbies and skills

- My native language is Dutch, next to which I am fluent in English. I've had five years of German language classes in high school and have a reasonable vocabulary, but not a lot of practical experience. I am keeping my German up to date by walking through the German course on Duolingo.com. I also finished the Norwegian (Bokmål) course on Duolingo. My Norwegian reading and writing skills are adequate, while my conversational level is still in early development.
- I am an aspiring videographer and am familiar with the process of filmmaking from writing to editing. Most of my current non-professional work can be found on <https://www.youtube.com/tomknowswhatsup>.
- I am a relatively technical person. For example, I currently enjoy building and tinkering with computers. With that comes a reasonable skill level in using Microsoft Office and the video, photo and graphics related software of Adobe Creative Cloud. I'm also a gamer with a widely varying interest in different genres of video games.
- I have a knack for music, but no professional aspirations in the field. I have played guitar since I was 8, and can read notes. I also had one year of classical singing lessons, mostly for the sake of experimentation, and am currently teaching myself to play piano.
- As for sports and physical activities, I used to train in 400 meter track ice skating and in-line skating, though in recent years that's been more of a low-key hobby. I do currently run about 5 kilometres, two or three times per week. Next to running I am also a casual skateboarder. I began riding small Penny boards three years ago, but have recently started riding long boards as well. Lastly: bicycling. Because I'm from the Netherlands, bicycling is essentially in my blood, and I'm used to doing quite a lot of it. I don't really consider this a sport though, but perhaps more so a native cultural activity.
